AYER'S PILLS.

A large proportion of the diseases which cause human suffering result from derangement of the stomach, bowels, and liver. AYER'S CATHARTIC PILLS act directly upon these organs, and are especially designed to cure the diseases caused by their derangement, including Constipation, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Headache, Dysentery, and a host of other ailments, for all of which they are a safe, sure, prompt, and pleasant remedy. The extensive use of these PILLS by eminent physicians in regular practice, shows unmistakably the estimation in which they are held by the medical profession.

These PILLS are compounded of vegetable substances only, and are absolutely free from calomel or any other injurious ingredient.

A Sufferer from Headache writes:

"AYER'S PILLS are invaluable to me, and are my constant companion. I have been a severe sufferer from Headache, and your PILLS are the only thing I could look to for relief. One dose will quickly move my bowels and free my head from pain. They are the most effective and the easiest physic I have ever found. It is a pleasure to me to speak in their praise, and I always do so when occasion offers."

W. L. PAGE, of W. L. Page & Bro.

Franklin St., Richmond, Va., June 3, 1882.

"I have used AYER'S PILLS in numerous instances as recommended by you, and have never known them to fail to accomplish the desired result. We constantly keep them on hand at our home, and prize them as a pleasant, safe, and reliable family medicine. FOR DYSPEPSIA they are invaluable."

J. T. HAYES.

Mexico, Texas, June 17, 1882.

The REV. FRANCIS B. HARLOWE, writing from Atlanta, Ga., says: "For some years past I have been subject to constipation, from which, in spite of the use of medicines of various kinds, I suffered increasing inconvenience, until some months ago I began taking AYER'S PILLS. They have entirely corrected the costive habit, and have vastly improved my general health."

AYER'S CATHARTIC PILLS correct irregularities of the bowels, stimulate the appetite and digestion, and by their prompt and thorough action give tone and vigor to the whole physical economy.

LITTLE AH SID.

Little Ah Sid
Was a Christian kid—
A cute little cuss you'd declare—
With eyes full of fun,
And nose that begun
Right up at the roots of his hair.

Jolly and fat
Was this frolicsome brat,
As he played through the long summer day,
And braided his queue
As his father used to,
In Chinland, far, far away.

Once o'er a lawn
Ah Sid played upon,
A bumble-bee flew in the spring;
"Median butterfly!"
Said he, with winking eye;
"Me catchee and pull off um wing!"

Then with his cap—
He struck it a rap—
This innocent bumble-bee—
And put it in his jeans,
In the seat of his jeans,
For a pocket there had the Chinese.

Down on the green
Sat the little sardine,
In a style that was strangely demure,
An said, with a grin
That was brim full of sin,
"Me mashee um butterfly, sure."

Little Ah Sid
Was only a kid,
Nor could you expect him to guess
What kind of a bug
He was holding so snug
In the folds of his loose fitting dress.

"Ki-yl! Ki-yl-ye!"
Ah Sid cried, as he
Rog hurriedly up from the spot.
"Ki-yl! Yuk-a-kan!"
Dun um Median man—
Um butterfly belly much bad!"

CARD FROM LEO MILLER.

"The Union, Civil and Conjugal," Dissolved.

To the Editor of the Inter Ocean.

DETROIT, Mich., April 22.—Believing that personal experience involving the welfare of society and rightfully the property of the whole species, the undersigned feels it incumbent upon himself to make known the conclusions of a social event which has caused no little public interest and comment.

Nine and a half years ago Martha (Mattie) Strickland, of St. Johns, Mich., and myself, formed a civil and conjugal union without the customary sanction of law, and published to the world our declaration and contract. The step was taken with the conscientious conviction that the proceeding was, under the circumstances, right and justifiable, and through all these years we have continued to live together in the most endearing relations of virtual husband and wife, notwithstanding the repeated assertions of the press that we had separated. We were led to form this unusual alliance in order to secure and enjoy openly what we conceived to be our natural, conjugal rights denied us by unjust and oppressive divorce laws. I was at the time a resident of New York, and the husband of a woman with whom it was impossible for me to live in peace and happiness. The divorce laws of that state do not permit legal separation of married parties for any cause other than that of adultery, and had I such cause of complaint I would soon to purchase my freedom at the expense of a woman I had once taken to my bosom as wife by dragging her into court and there publicly blasting her character beyond the hope of redemption.

I became acquainted with Miss Strickland and a mutual affection sprang up between us. We desired to unite our lives and destinies in that most sacred of all human relations, marriage, but could not do so under the customary usages of society because of the iron bands that bound me to another. After deliberating over the matter for a year we concluded to assume the responsibility and the consequences, whatever they might be, of forming an open conjugal union in defiance of law.

Years of reflection and experience have brought with them the conviction that the step we took was ill-advised and wrong, that it would have been wiser and nobler to have sacrificed our own personal happiness and what we deemed to be our natural rights than to have made this revolutionary assault upon the marriage institution. Marriage is of divine origin, an outgrowth of the higher moral sentiments, not the lower propensities. In the early, animal life of the race, before the moral and spiritual nature had attained any very considerable degree of development, we find that polygamy, polyandry, and general promiscuousness characterize the relations of the sexes. But with the evolution of the higher nature comes the voice of the Divine revealing the ultimate intentions of the Creator respecting the proper social relations of man and woman. The whole tendency of civilization, marked especially by the sentiments, aspirations and longings of the noblest and purest specimens of the race, point conclusively to the fact that monogamy—the union for life of one man and one woman—constitutes the only true marriage ordained by nature and nature's God for noble, rational beings; and it is undeniably the right and duty of the earthly legislator to transcribe this higher marriage law to his statute books and enjoin its observance. Just and discriminating provisions should be made to release parties from the marriage bonds when from any cause they defeat the ends of marriage and work evil rather than good, misery rather than happiness; but to strike down all law would lead to universal social anarchy. While the race has made great advancement from its primitive state average human nature is still crude and disorderly, and needs direction and restraint. The few might be a law unto themselves, and observe all the requirements and proprieties of true marriage, but the masses, left wholly to their own undisciplined impulses would run riot in social excesses. But the law can make no discrimination in favor of the few; all must observe its requirements, and if it be found in any way imperfect and oppressive we should seek to reform it, not abolish it.

These facts and considerations have become more and more deeply impressed upon the mind, compelling at last a frank confession that the martial alliance contracted between Miss Strickland and myself in disregard of custom and law was a grave mistake through which we have unwittingly done society an injury. Honor and duty alike require that the only reparation now possible in the case should be made, viz: A public renunciation of the self-instituted marriage. It is done. The union, civil and conjugal, formed by myself and Martha Strickland on the 24 day of November, 1875, is, by mutual consent, dissolved this 22d day of April, 1885.

LEO MILLER.

Gambetta on Grant.

M. Gambetta the celebrated French statesman, pronounced Grant's military career the most brilliant since the days of Napoleon, and fully equal to that of other famous soldiers. He said he even surpassed the great French captain in this, that he never failed. Wellington drove Napoleon from Waterloo; the ill-armed Teutons of the Rhine drove back the splendidly equipped Romans under Julius Caesar, fresh from the battles of the Triumvirate; Xerxes failed in his expedition against Greece; and Alexander's successes, as well as his reverses, were against armies for the most part inferior to his own. But General Grant met his equals in intelligence and military skill, and if he was hard pressed at one or two places—notably at Pittsburg Landing and at Cold Harbor—it was the enemy and not he who ultimately retreated. "Moreover," continued M. Gambetta, "no other general known to history ever commanded such large armies for an equal period with success," and after making all deductions M. Gambetta declares that history is sure to find Grant's military career absolutely unsurpassed, not only because of the actual results accomplished, but for the justice of his cause. M. Gambetta also said that what impressed him more than anything else "with the greatness of General Grant was the fact that after having accomplished so much with the sword, after stamping his mighty genius on the rolls of history, and proving himself the equal if not the superior of Alexander the Great, Hannibal the African, Caesar the Roman, Wellington the Irishman, our own Napoleon, and the distinguished Von Moltke, and other German generals, that he should quietly and modestly resume his citizenship, and after years of camp life be willing, nay, anxious, to lay aside the sword and be one of the mighty mass of persons who are making his country so great in all good things. No words were ever more manlike or determined than General Grant's, 'I propose to fight it out on this line if it takes all summer,' and none were ever more eloquent or more to the point than his 'Let us have peace.'"

THE BURRO.

Some Account of the Little Mexican Donkey.

Apart from the Indians and Mexicans, these animals are the most characteristic and ubiquitous objects in New Mexico. The shaggy little brutes range from the size of a small Newfoundland to that of a six months old heifer. It is practically impossible to overload them. They will carry all that can be piled on their backs. I have frequently seen a solid heap of wood gliding mysteriously into town, with no apparent motive power, but I knew that somewhere underneath the pile there was hidden a burro. When released from their burdens they will immediately set to work with diligence and gusto picking up a living in the midst of stones and dry cactus, where any other animal would starve to death. Joe proceeded to attach them, by a wonderful series of knots, to the supporting posts under the house. I watched him curiously as he tied knot after knot, and at length ventured to inquire whether burros usually employ their spare time in performing juggling tricks.

Joe regarded me with a smile which was compounded of one part of good natured contempt, two of superior knowledge, and three of genuine amusement. "Wa'al," he said, "you are somewhat of a tenderfoot; that's so. Why a burro is a born devil."

"Do you mean to say that a burro can undo one of those knots with his teeth?" I asked.

"I don't purfess to say what he does it with. He may do it with his tail for all I know, but if you learn me a knot that a burro can't undo, if you give him time enough, I will tell you thanks. Why, the father of all evil is not a patch on an old jack burro for infernal cleverness and mischief."—Harper's Magazine

Birds Know a Thing or Two.

A writer on birds says there are rules of the road which the feathered tribe obey. Some travel by night some by day, and the latter, as a rule, seek safety in their numbers and the rapidity of their flight. Hawks and jackdaws have a curious habit of varying the height at which they fly. They generally press forward on their journey at a great elevation, till, suddenly, some among their number drop down several hundred feet with closed wings, when others follow suit, till presently the whole company has changed its level, and is pressing on at only 100 feet from the ground. Migrating birds usually go in irregular flocks with open spaces between. A pilot bird generally precedes swallows. Among all the migrants the flight of storks affords the most beautiful spectacle, owing to their most extraordinary power of wing, and to the gambols and aerial ballets which they practice while still advancing rapidly with each successive sweep of their strong wings.
